

Is our current educational model providing young people with the knowledge, skills, and dispositions necessary to survive and thrive in an uncertain future?

How can education cultivate “ecological citizens” who feel a sense of kinship with all beings and act as responsible stewards of the land?

What is our deepest, most heartfelt hope for a compassionate human race, and how can education help manifest this hope?

Join Kathleen Kesson, Professor Emeritus (LIU-Brooklyn), former Director of Education at Goddard College, and founding Director of the John Dewey Project on Progressive Education at the University of Vermont for a conversation about the future of education.
